Welcome to Russia Offshore 2012!

According to the U.S. Geological Survey, the Arctic holds about one fifth of the world's remaining oil and gas reserves with almost half of the disputed space being claimed by Russia. Moscow plans to submit its official claim to the United Nations in 2012 and considers the Arctic to be crucial to the country's economic strategy as early as 2020. Russian MPs deliberating how to advance national interests in offshore development openly admit Russia's lack of advanced technologies comparatively to the West to be on a "cosmic scale".

The quest for the Arctic resources has been already labelled in the press as the new "scramble for Africa" or the Californian "gold rush". Russia's Nature Ministry estimates its resources in the Arctic zone at 120 billion barrels of oil and 85 trillion cubic meters of gas. The Barents Sea alone holds an estimated 7.6 billion metric tons of oil equivalent. In the face of global shortage of hydrocarbon resources there has never been a better time for both Western and Russian companies to get their efforts together – the ultimate objective of the "Russia offshore" conference and exhibition.

Attracting all the key operators working on the Russian continental shelf, government representatives, investors and leading technology providers, the 7th Annual "Russia Offshore 2012" conference in March, 2012 provides you with first-hand information directly from the operators on the key offshore projects in Russia, including Shtokman, Yamal fields, Prerazlomnoye, Sakhalin projects, Korchagin field, Filanovsky field and Shatsky ridge. We will also look at the ExxonMobil plans for long term involvement in the Kara Sea and the Black Sea.

We are delighted to welcome you to Russia Offshore 2012 in Moscow, where you will have all your questions answered by top oil and gas executives and experts.

7th Annual Conference & Exhibition

Maximise your involvement and generate extra exposure

Exploration and development of Russian offshore resources requires massive investments and long-term co-operation between the Russian state and Russian as well as Western companies.

“Until 2030 Gazprom, in order to develop the continental shelf, will need more than ten drilling and processing platforms, over 60 vessels and waterborne vehicles and equipment of various types and at least several dozens of LNG carriers.”*
